

BATES VS. PORTER

DECISION CONCERNING SACRAMENTO WATER WORKS FUNDS.

The Supreme Court Gives to the Bondholders 55 Per Cent. of Gross Receipts.

In the case of George E. Bates vs. the City of Sacramento, the decision in which case was filed on the 1st inst. by the State Supreme Court in bank, the majority of the Court, 6 to 3, and following opinion in favor of the bondholders.

Bates vs. Porter, Treasurer of the City of Sacramento (No. 11,575).—This is an application for a writ of mandamus to command the respondent to execute and deliver to the petitioner a fund known as the sinking fund 55 per cent. of all moneys received by him collected for water rents in the city of Sacramento.

It is urged on behalf of respondent that the Treasurer is bound to set apart the net receipts of the water works, after deducting therefrom various items of expenses in conducting the same, and including salaries of its officers and employees. The contention of applicant is that the respondent is not to set apart the gross receipts, without deducting any time.

We are of the opinion that the contention of applicant is sustained by the law, which we shall proceed to show.

The city of Sacramento was incorporated by an Act passed on the 27th of February, 1850. (Stats. 1850, p. 70.) This Act is referred to in the opinion in the case of Mayor Brown vs. City of Sacramento, 1850, 1851, 1852, 1853, 1854, 1855, 1856, 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, MR. COMSTOCK AND NUDITY IN ART.

In another column we print a letter from Mr. Anthony Comstock, of New York, Secretary of the Society for the Suppression of Vice. The matter discussed by Mr. Comstock relates to a criticism indulged in by the Record-Union upon his act in prosecuting Knudsen, a picture dealer, for exhibiting photographs of works of art shown in European galleries. Mr. Comstock explains the matter in a way to impress us with the belief that the entire truth has not been given to the people concerning the affair of the arrest. We gather from Mr. Comstock's letter that not the photographs of Salon pictures were shown, but parts of pictures, single figures, etc., and that these, taken out of their proper atmosphere, became very different in character and in their effect upon the mind when exposed to view upon the street. We invite attention to Mr. Comstock's letter. It is mainly and vigorously. We have for so many years taken pleasure in commending his work, and in approving his philanthropic purposes, that it was with more regret we were led to believe by statements of Eastern journals, that in this case of the photographs Mr. Comstock had erred, and the impression is not wholly removed. We have understood that the Court of Appeals did not pass upon the obscenity of the pictures, and that they were not and could not have been before that Court. A jury, we were told, had, indeed, judged the pictures, but the press of New York assailed the verdict on the ground of the incompetency of the average criminal jury to pass upon such questions. We had understood that, in fact, the pictures were not looked upon by the people as lewd until the Society Mr. Comstock represents had Knudsen arrested. If this is true, then Mr. Comstock's pursuit of Knudsen only advertised his wares. Unquestionably there is that shown annually in the Salon which, reproduced by photography, or other method of transfer, would be unfit for the eye of youth—very much is shown there which the mass of clean-thinking people would pronounce lewd. But we are to consider that in this matter something is to be conceded to the demands of art, and that the tastes of a very large class of people cannot be ignored. It may be that we must make our selection between enduring the nudity of the Paris Salon, and giving its reproduction such publicity as will make it the more sought after. The question of impurity in art works is an old one, and never will be settled. Communities will forever divide in opinion upon it, and therefore it is questionable if the objects which create the division come properly within the scope of the work of the society whose agent Mr. Comstock is. He and the society have done so much in the interest of good morals, have had such grand support by the public, and the field for their activity is so broad—almost boundless—that it is with sincere regret we see any issue raised likely to divide the support and diminish the usefulness of the New York association. We admit Mr. Comstock's picture, that in reproduction of famous pictures is so done as to suggest only lewdness, and to appeal only to the passions, then it is a fit subject for assault. But whether Mr. Comstock's society, which is such a powerful agency for good, can afford to cripple its efforts, and divert its energies by fighting an adverse sentiment to his, or his Directors' ideas as to the boundary between the permissible and the intolerable in art, is a matter upon which we have very little doubt. If, however, the society can see its way clear to achieve victory, no one will more heartily wish it success than the Record-Union.

A PROGRESSING REFORM.

The progress the Spelling Reform Association of North America is making in simplifying English orthography, is too apparent to be given the contemptuous consideration heretofore accorded it. The lexicographers no longer ignore the claims of the reformers, but in each new edition yield more and more to their common-sense methods of framing the visible form of languages. David Dudley Field, of New York, recently said of these reformers: "Our noble English tongue, already spoken over more of the earth's surface than any other living tongue, and yet to be spoken over more, is disgraced by so many anomalies, and hampered by so many arbitrary usages, that I will not call them that he is to be not merely corrected, but hailed as a deliverer who will rescue it, and, by the sacrifice of present convenience, give future ease to all English people till the end of time." Professor F. A. March, the distinguished philologist of Lafayette College, puts the spelling reform upon very much higher ground than most of its advocates. He holds that the present system hampers intelligence, wastes a great deal of the time of youth in learning that which, after all, is never learned completely; that in consequence the intellect is affected for ill, and, besides, the sense of order, proportion, fitness and law is offended. As moral degeneracy follows the want of cultivated intelligence, and the whole process of spelling is at present stupefying and perverting, patriotism ought to prompt us to reform our system and philanthropy confirm us in the resolution to do so; because, just as moral degeneracy is cultivated, national progress is endangered. This is, of course, an exalted view, and we are constrained to say a rather extreme not to say extravagant, aspect of the subject. But this much is undeniable; whatever contributes facility in the acquirement of knowledge; whatever smooths the path of difficulty in cultivating the intellect and removes obstacles from the methods of education, must contribute to intellectual advancement and mental strength, and consequently tend to lessen illiteracy. That the spelling reformers are contributing to these ends must be conceded by all who dispassionately examine their briefs.

If the educators and philologists and lexicographers will break away from prejudices and set aside the old-time, arbitrary and unreasonable rules, that this order of letters must be so because a vowel precedes, or that the other order of arrangement follows because a consonant precedes, and the whole long list of involved and dogmatic rules and so-called reasons that govern the present spelling, they will see, and eventually confess that the aim and purpose of spelling ought to be to give that visible form to language which, with least friction, trouble and mental exercise, will convey thought through the medium of the eye to the mind. If they dispassionately examine the question as presented by such colleagues as Whitney of Yale, Muller of Oxford, White of Cornell, Chadbourne of Williams, Barnard of Columbia, Harrison of Washington and Lee, Child of Harvard, Sumner, Hadley and Peck of Yale, and others of equal eminence, they must come to the conclusion that not only the simplest, but the easiest of all reforms offered to the world, is that tendered by the advanced philologists of America and England, and in the path of which the chief obstacle is stubborn prejudice.

As ex-President White of Cornell University puts it, our present system is a barrier against the most important agent in the rapid civilization and Christianization of the world. "I have no doubt that the English orthography simplified, the English language would within a generation or two become the business language of the more active part of the vast semi-civilized East, of China, Japan, India, and the islands of the Pacific." The official organ of the Reform Spelling Association, published by the Boston Library Bureau, in a late number declares that it has evidences that about all the best educators of the country, the independent thinkers and the best informed men of our time are in accord with the reform. But this is so, they would gladly concede to make their faith known. One moved. We have understood that the Court of Appeals did not pass upon the obscenity of the pictures, and that they were not and could not have been before that Court. A jury, we were told, had, indeed, judged the pictures, but the press of New York assailed the verdict on the ground of the incompetency of the average criminal jury to pass upon such questions. We had understood that, in fact, the pictures were not looked upon by the people as lewd until the Society Mr. Comstock represents had Knudsen arrested. SHAKESPEAREAN DEBATE.

Lawrence Barrett, the actor, comes to the rescue of the memory of Shakespeare, and in the North American Review for December marshals some of the evidences that support his faith that Shakespeare wrote the plays of Shakespeare. Mr. Barrett's arraignment of the proof is novel, if the evidences themselves are not new. His defense of the bard is dignified protest against Donnellyism, and as such is worthy of more than passing notice. Mr. Barrett begins by indulging in some philosophic reflections concerning this age of reason, and of exploration in search of truth, the relevancy of which to the subject in hand is obscure. His introduction has value only as a protest against the new rule that, applies analysis to literature, and the spirit of suspicion that demands of every author that he present credentials establishing, against distrust, that in fact he produced that he claims as the child of his brain. Coming down from rather exalted and fanciful flights to the subject proper, Mr. Barrett holds it to be established beyond a doubt, that such a man as Shakespeare lived, and that he was a native of Stratford-on-Avon; that he was married, and there were born to him children; that he was an actor in London; that he was useful to the theatrical corporation, for he amassed a fortune; that he was gifted, for contemporary writers extol his genius as a playwright; that in full maturity he died, and that over his grave his widow caused to be placed a copy of his features. He claims as fairly proven also, that in 1623 two surviving partners and fellow actors of this man, venerated his genius, collected from the acting copies in the theatre library most of his works—and he who later on points out, Shakespeare did not own—and printed them, though they were edited in a very poor way. That contemporary poet and actor—Ben Jonson, in times immemorially bequeathed the portrait of his rival to posterity, and seemed to entertain no doubt that even his "small Latin and less Greek" would not invalidate the poetical claims of Shakespeare. These things are taken as proved. But Mr. Barrett forgets that Donnelly squarely questions the claim of genius made for Shakespeare, or that there is any sufficient evidence that it was contemporaneously recognized. However, the proofs upon the affirmative are positive, while Mr. Donnelly's are mainly inferential. Now says Mr. Barrett, for two centuries Shakespeare's works have been the study of the people, and he proceeds to illuminate his argument by citing the numerous tests analytical and otherwise, which the Shakespearean text has undergone, and to point out the wonderful foresight of its author, and the astonishing vision with which he penetrated deep into life's mysteries. We are now asked to reject Shakespeare and accept Bacon as the real author of the text, and the basis for this request is "conflicting negatives and distorted facts." In this bit of incisive expression Mr. Barrett is very happy; there have been applied to Mr. Donnelly's unsatisfactory assaults no better descriptions. Before we can accept, says Barrett, the idea that an unpretending man like Shakespeare could not discourse as he did of classic themes, and so deal with the history of many nations, and so analyze and read human nature, it ought to be demanded that proof be adduced that only the scholar and antiquarian give us such works. In fact in the domain of literature, such as that to which the study of Shakespeare leads us, simple learning and technical attainments have never yet laid us under any obligations whatever. "If the author of the great first epic was a university graduate, or a man of place or parts, we have no record of it."

The essayist cites numerous examples of great genius and profound wisdom, which received small recognition in its own day, and sprang from lowly conditions, and he asks "was it a scholar and a noble, who from a cart's tail, before a multitude of listeners, dramatized the belief of a nation, and by his own creative genius gave vitality and clearness to the story of Prometheus?" The creator of the Greek language—a minnesinger, the founder of the Greek drama, are cited as instances of genius in lowly and unambitious places; the Greek tragedies were written by men who were actors or managers, and no contemporary note of any lost work disproves the fact. The works of the French dramatists are those Moliere created. Scarcely a reputation of the contemporaries of Shakespeare can escape disrepute under the theory advanced by Donnelly of similarity of expression. Chaucer and Spenser were drawn upon by Marlowe and Jonson, as well as the woolen-drapers son. That Shakespeare has no place in Elizabethan chronicles, Mr. Barrett thinks proves nothing more than that the contemporary writers of any era are not quick to recognize the higher genius of a fellow worker.

Yet Mr. Barrett thinks it susceptible of proof that Shakespeare held the secure place among the non-theater goers of his time which he now holds. As to publication, his works were published only over the lights of the stage. His calling was degraded in the eyes of many of the literary classes, and it would therefore be curious to find his claims allowed by such as Sir Thomas Browne or Robert Greene. But contemporary mention of him is abundant, and the only way the Baconians can reply to it is to ignore or cast discredit upon it. Their final stand is made upon the "Sonnets," because there is some resemblance between Bacon's expression and Shakespeare's. But the whole theory proceeds upon the assumption that Bacon was ashamed to own his work; allowed his masterpieces to pass in his time unclaimed, and when the reputed author died, deliberately consented to their publication accredited to another. Barrett recalls Macaulay's answer, that if Bacon in prosperity might have disowned the works, there came a time, in his disgrace and poverty, when his claim to plays already the delight of the nation, would have again raised him in popular favor and regained him the glory of the glory he had lost. But he died and made no sign. Mr. Barrett holds that as it is true poets are born and not made, so it is true that dramatists are born and grow. Shakespeare was one of the royal poets whose lines will remain imperishable in our literature. He was born in England, and drank in with his earliest inspiration all the influences of that beautiful land. They quickened his fervid imagination, and gave calm and peace to the tumult of his fiery soul. In his time an effusive language was giving way before a living tongue. A new world of enterprise was opening, and genius in art and science was under new inspiration. The stage was the one open and lucrative road to fame and wealth for the poet and playwright, and this it was led Shakespeare in that direction.

The plays to which his genius gave birth passed out of his hands by contract according to the custom of the day, and hence he had no such property to devise, a fact Mr. Donnelly neglects to take into account. Bacon devised his papers to be stable, but made no mention of such precious manuscripts as it is now sought to credit to his authorship. The poems and many of the plays were republished after the death of Shakespeare, with his name unusually prominent, but Bacon was silent in the face of this alleged "posthumous" though he had so much of father to expect if he proved their paternity to be in him. If Shakespeare was an impostor, those about him were knaves and fools. Southampton's friendship for Shakespeare is denied, and it is attempted to unite Bacon and Southampton in friendly relations, that the infamous conduct of Bacon toward Essex, Southampton's friend and relative, makes unthinkable. Finally, Mr. Barrett argues that there is no ingenuity of reasoning that associates the life and work of Bacon with the plays that cannot be more sensibly used in favor of the reputed author. The very defects of Shakespeare's verse would dishonor the collegian, and his many errors, false quantities, anachronisms of all kinds, would disgrace a merely well-read or educated man. On the ground of goodness and sobriety, the testimony is in favor of Shakespeare, for he holds that the world's history gives us record of no such infamous life as that of Bacon, when his gifts and surroundings are taken into account.

Mr. Barrett's defense, as we have said, is not wholly new, but its method is strong and it is the first voice from the stage to protest against the strained conclusions and warped logic of Donnelly and his collaborators. Before what we do know of Shakespeare and his life work; in the face of what we know of his times; the attempt to put Bacon in his place upon conjectural reasoning, and the forced cipher that is claimed to exist in the text of the plays will fail; the world will not surrender its two hundred years of faith in the belief that William Shakespeare wrote the plays attributed to him.

A MATTER OF DECENCY.

The Mayor of Lebanon, Pa., is endeavoring to suppress profanity on the streets, and he is right in his endeavor. The error into which those fall who denounce him, is the assumption that he is proceeding against offenders for blasphemy. This is wholly a mistake. He is acting in the interests of decency only, not of religion. Profanity is vulgar, and it is unlawful to use vulgar language in the hearing of one or more persons. A half dozen of men and women have been sent up for "twenty-four hours" by the Police Courts of San Francisco every Court day for twenty-five years for that offense. So the Mayor of Lebanon is not amenable to the censoring criticism of the people who pretend to be so fearful that somebody will attempt to cram a religious dogma down the public throat. The truth is, that whoever has ears and hears, and walks the business streets at evening with wife, daughter or sister, is mortified and shamed beyond expression by the resonance of the air with filthy words and profanity. It is an even chance that no citizen can get by an ordinary evening street group of "corner states," with a lady upon his arm, without hearing loudly-uttered vulgarity that makes him blush for his sex and regret that life is present. The Mayor of Lebanon is rightly proceeding—would that other executive officers in all our municipalities were as active in a like cause. The right of society is to have decent language used upon the street. It is not an inviolable attribute of personal liberty to enjoy a right to spew forth upon the public atmosphere. We know of an instance of recent occurrence that illustrates the subject. A brother passing upon a public street in this city with his sister upon his arm, met a group of modern night-hawlers, who, though they saw the lady approaching, did not pause in their vulgar and reckless word-filth. Shortly after the young man returned, sought out the leader of the group, and proceeded to give him a drubbing that he will never forget. It was a manly and timely protest against brutal street vulgarity. If the people who do not choose to have their hearing assailed and their lady friends insulted by such forms of speech, would emulate the example used, it is probable there would be less of filthy language used upon the highways.

The National Republican Convention is to be held in Chicago on the 19th of June, 1888. The selection of the place is wise for one, if for no other reason; Chicago has been the field for the first active campaign by anarchism against the law, order in society and against the Republic itself. It was there that the first Russian bomb fell in America, and that the majesty of the law asserted itself, and meted out to the advocates of disorder their just dues. It is therefore especially fitting that the party which stands pre-eminent for its adhesion to the laws and its defense of property ownership and the maintenance of social conditions that conserve the inalienable rights of men, should go to that city to hold its National Convention. It testifies thereby to its approval of the course of the people of Chicago, and to its undying enmity to anarchism and radical socialism. Senator Cullum had such thoughts in mind when he addressed the committee upon the question of location and urged the committee to select Chicago. He made a brief resume of the hotel, railroad and telegraphic facilities of the city. "Chicago to-day was in favor of protection and had been improved in other ways since 1854. It had had much to do in grappling with the element of communism and socialism that had been spreading over the country. It had been settled that the man disregarding the rights of the law could not live in Chicago or in the Commonwealth. He hoped Chicago would be selected, but whether it was or not, Illinois and Minnesota and Kansas and Iowa would vote the Republican ticket." Minnesota, by the way, is one of the States in the West President Cleveland has believed he could carry with his free trade doctrine. But he is certainly mistaken. Minnesota is becoming a manufacturing community, and its producers besides have found out, as Mr. Kasson has so well put it, that to conserve a home market where there is excess of food production, it is essential to foster manufacturing interests, that there may be more mouths to feed.

From this time until the two National Conventions shall have met and adjourned the American people are to be involved in all the perplexing anxiety that precedes the making of Presidential nominations. We begin to make Presidents too early and take time by too long a forelock in this matter. This will be strikingly and fearfully demonstrated in the first half of the year 1888. Because of uncertainty as to whether the Democracy will endorse Mr. Cleveland's tariff policy, every vocation and industry touched by the tariff will be timorous, unsettled and feverish. The great majority of the people of the nation will turn to the Republican party for protection from what they believe is the assault of a policy that will be injurious to the production, labor and manufactures in the United States. The party is not, it is true, a unit upon the tariff question. Some of its eminent men and old-time apostles are not protectionists. Whether they will cut themselves off from affiliation with the party because of its protective tendencies, and go over to the Democracy, for which they were born with rooted aversion, remains to be seen. But the lines are now being sharply drawn, and we will not have long to wait for a massing of forces. The Democracy, we fear, will drop Mr. Cleveland, no matter how credit he is pledged to his Administration. Mr. Carlisle will probably be unable to deliver according to the bargain he is supposed to have made, and the party will be very likely to take up a man who at least has not expressed himself so positively as has the courageous Mr. Cleveland. His past history gives warrant for this belief, for it has been one of cowardice. Upon a platform looking in two directions, it will endeavor to make a campaign for the retention of power, and regardless of any other results. On the other hand, the Republican party will, in all likelihood, declare in June next for protection in an unmistakable manner, and make its fight for recovery of the Government upon that issue, with the Freedman's political protection as merely a supplemental campaign agency.

Press Notes.

"Woman's Work," a new journal of a new journal published at Athens, Ga. It is edited by Mrs. Ella B. Tennent, and devoted to domestic economy. The paper is issued in quarto form of 16 pages, and the initial number is a good specimen of a standard family journal. It is published monthly, at fifty cents a year. Felix Gillet, proprietor of the Barren Hill Nurseries, Nevada City, has issued another illustrated and descriptive catalogue of nuts, prunes and fruit trees. It will be especially valuable to those interested in nut trees.

The weekly Pioneer, edited by E. W. Pierce and published at Turlock, in the San Joaquin valley, one of the new papers recently launched upon the sea of California journalism. It is a four-page paper of five columns each, and presents materials of local interest, as well as general news, in a bright and attractive form.

Mrs. America Davidson, a niece of General Davidson, is in destitute circumstances in Virginia.

HOLIDAY GOODS.

TRADE AND BUSINESS DIRECTORY OF SACRAMENTO FOR 1887.
Business Houses at Which Superior Inducements are Offered for Holiday Goods, Etc.

It has become an established fact throughout the coast that better bargains can be made with Sacramento merchants than with those of any other city in the State. The interior merchant comes to Sacramento, where he can buy the same goods for a considerably less sum of money than in San Francisco, from the simple fact that Sacramento dealers are at far less expense for rents and numerous expenditures. This is true of the wholesale merchant, and equally true of the retailer and small dealer. It is gratifying to all who desire the prosperity of our city to notice the improvements made in the merchandising business of Sacramento yearly. The stores and trading places throughout the city are just now filled to overflowing with holiday stocks, and an extra force of clerks are kept busy waiting upon customers and carrying goods to cash. In order to aid those who are about to make purchases, either of holiday goods, articles of personal adornment, household furnishings and supplies in general, and in accordance with our annual custom, we have introduced the following list of the houses whose judgment and prudence has led them to combine in the selection of the season's goods and claims for the public patronage and favor. A careful perusal of the several announcements and cards of our advertising patrons will be found to be advantageous, as well as containing the fact of the excellence of the goods offered, and satisfaction as to prices. We have introduced the following list of the houses and their announcements in to-day's issue:

Another "Corker."

Ens. Record-Union: Under the heading of "New Industries" in your issue of Friday, I find some statements which seem to me to require verification. Your correspondent must have served an apprenticeship in Southern California before undertaking to boom the Redding section, or possibly a "tenderfoot," who has been used as a "stock-pigeon." The establishment of the "apiary" may be all right, and also the cultivation of twenty acres of horseradish—that the busy bees may gather honey—but why does the producer get "one dollar per pound for his crop," and why does the "New York druggist" offer "fifty cents per pound for the next twenty-five years," when prime, extracted Los Angeles honey can be bought for nine cents? I would suggest to the "gentleman" that he now intersperse some "honey" amongst his horseradish, and he can then bottle his crop on the ranch, label it "honey of horseradish and tar" and sell it for cough medicine. "This same man" is growing bergamot and "making oil of bergamot" right in the same county. The plant commonly called bergamot is
